

Key Points Summary

Rev. Jamie Butcher, Covenant Presbyterian Church

April 21, 2024

- This article discusses how the author's family clan holds a unique family reunion called Decoration Day, where they visit and decorate the graves of their ancestors.
- Other cultures, such as the Day of the Dead and the Malagasy people's "turning of the bones," also have traditions of regularly revisiting and honoring the dead.
- Research shows that children who know their family history and have a strong sense of their ancestral roots experience enhanced emotional well-being.
- Surprisingly, the Bible tells us that Moses, a prominent prophet, does not have a known burial place, possibly to avoid idolatry or emphasize Joshua's leadership.
- The article prompts reflection on the importance of balancing the reverence for ancestors with embracing new things and moving forward in faith.
- The author mentions her personal inclination to dwell on the past and shares her need for growth in viewing the future with hope and trust in God's promises.
- Covenant is actively looking toward the future with plans for baptisms, intern programs, a capital campaign, grant opportunities, and celebrating significant milestones like the church's 100th anniversary.
